

Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA) Request for Reasonable Accommodation

Individuals with a qualified disability are protected against discrimination by the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA) and the Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA). To be considered as having a qualified disability you must be significantly restricted in the ability to perform either a class of jobs or a broad range of jobs.

To be eligible for an accommodation you must have a qualified disability. An individual is considered to have a disability if that person has:

1. A physical impairment, mental impairment, or medical condition that limits one or more major life activities (e.g., walking, speaking, breathing, performing manual tasks, seeing, hearing, learning, caring for oneself, sitting, standing, lifting, reading, and working).
2. A record of such impairment (e.g., a history of having had an impairment caused by cancer though you currently do not have the impairment and may be free of cancer).
3. Is regarded as having such impairment.

The ADA and FEHA does not require employers to hire or promote unqualified or lesser qualified individuals. All individuals must be able to perform the essential functions of the job and meet the educational and experience prerequisites for that position. Employers are free to determine the standards of proficiency or productivity associated with performing the essential functions of the job and to select the most qualified individuals.

Identifying a reasonable accommodation is a cooperative process that will be evaluated individually. Inquiries regarding accommodations can be made to the ADA Coordinator or by completing a Reasonable Accommodation form.
