In recent months, All-American Heavyweights has gained momentum by producing a heavyweight boxer who will represent the USA in the 2012 Summer Olympic Games in London. Heavyweight boxer Dominic Breazeale is a 26-year-old, 6 feet 7 inches tall, 255 pound boxer who fights out of the Rock Gym in the city of Carson.

The Rock Gym was established for the purpose of creating the next greatest heavyweight boxer. The gym also serves as an example to youth that they can achieve their dreams through determination and hard work.

For those unaware, the Carson Sheriff’s Station’s Gang Diversion Team and All-American Heavyweights have maintained a strong partnership for the past three years. The Gang Diversion Team focuses on transforming at-risk and gang-affiliated youth into career-oriented, law-abiding, productive citizens. Through our relationship with All-American Heavyweights, we hope to continue our positive impact on our community’s youth.

Recently, Deputy Fred Noya was interviewed by Laura Okmin of FOX Sports regarding the Gang Diversion Team and All-American Heavyweights. The interview focused on their partnership as well as their unwavering support for Dominic in the 2012 Summer Olympics. So this summer, look for this televised interview and learn more about Dominic and the outstanding support team behind him.
